OBJECTS AND REASONS

This Bill is intended to translate and enact into law the liberties prescribed by the Constitution of the United Republic through an amendment in Article 18 of the said Constitution. This Bill, if passed into a law will address the freedoms as well as the responsibilities and conduct of the media. The Bill is divided into six Parts.

Part I contains the preliminary matters of short title, territorial application and definitions of certain basic words and expressions used in the Bill.

Part II provides for the freedom to establish media, whether for citizens of the United Republic, citizens of the East African Community or foreigners on differential terms. There will be public service media owned by the public through independent governing boards accountable to Parliament. The state will no longer own any commercial media but will maintain state information services which will provide free services to the public if this Bill is passed into law. Media practitioners will operate freely, but will be regulated by a professional code of ethics which will be enforced through the Media Council. No person will print or distribute a newspaper or operate an electronic broadcasting facility without first acquiring an appropriate licence by TCRA. The publisher of every newspaper printed in the United Republic will be obliged to file two copies of every issue with the Information Registry established under the Right to Information Act, 2010. There will be an obligation for a publisher or broadcaster to publish on the request of any person aggrieved a recant of any false account of facts which has been published about him.

Part III sets out the conditions and manner journalists and other media practitioners will acquire their accreditation, including employed and freelance media professionals.

Part IV spells out the accountability of the media practitioners to the public. The Arbitration Committee established under section 33 of the Bill will entertain complaints from the public arising out of any offensive publication or broadcast which is alleged to offend the complainant. The Committee will have power to summon any media outlet or practitioner to show cause why disciplinary measures should not be taken in the light of a complaint from any person. The stakeholders' media council will act as the secretariat to the Committee which will have power to inflict punishment by way of damages, award of costs, suspension from practice or any other suitable punishment. While the media practitioners will be entitled as of right to hide their sources of information, the High Court will have power to order disclosure after hearing the parties in camera to meet the ends of justice in any suitable case.

Part V of the Bill sets out the power of TCRA to make regulations to complement the provisions of the proposed Act, including the conditions and manner and particulars for application for registration of media outlets, as well as the practitioners, the form of licences and other matters. This Part repeals four laws which cannot subsist or co-exist under the letter and spirit or philosophy of the proposed law if this Bill is passed.

Part VI will amend thirteen laws in order to accommodate the concept of the freedom of access to information available to all citizens including the media. Article 18 of the Constitution of the United Republic as amended by the Fifth Constitutional Amendment (Act No.15 of 1984) has entrenched the freedom to seek, access and disseminate information. Most of these laws impose an unduly extensive cover of secrecy and confidentiality on information held by public officers and others, and the scope can be and has been extended indefinitely, unaccountably or even whimsically by the simple act of declaring (by stamping or marking) a document or information as ‘classified’ under G.N. 133 of 1970 issued under the National Security Act of 1970.
